

Mesa Storytellers Presents: Tales About Family

The History of Storytelling, from
Storytellingday.net

Before man learned to write, he had to rely on his memory to learn anything. For this he had to be a good listener. A good story teller was always respected.

He could easily find an audience, eager to devour every exciting bit of information in their stories.

These stories were also shared with others in far away lands because when people traveled, the stories traveled with them. And when they returned home, they brought with them exciting new tales of exotic places and people.
